Women of Lincoln County - Part 1

By Jyll Phillips, Lincoln-Sentinel

Women's Equality Day, celebrating the 104th anniversary of the passage of the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution which gave women the right to vote is August 26. In recognition of this momentous event, the Sentinel will run a series of articles about the historic, and sometimes heroic women who made Lincoln County what it is today. This series will culminate in September, with a program at Lincoln County Historical Museum that will tie a new mural to be placed in the State Capitol Building in honor of the state's historic women to the historymaking women of Lincoln County.

August 18 is the 104th anniversary of ratification of the Nineteenth Amendment which gave women the right to vote. This is the first of a series of articles about the strength and determination of women in Lincoln County history in relation to our foundation and convictions. The series will culminate in September with the unveiling of a new mural to be placed in the State Capitol Building celebrating the historic and sometimes heroic women of Kansas. Included in this mural is Mrs. Anna Waite, an early Lincoln County settler. A program will be presented at the Lincoln County Historical Museum in conjunction with the unveiling of the mural.

Giving what they can

By Jyll Phillips, Lincoln-Sentinel

Breanna and Logan Bush, students in USD 298, with help from their mother, Bonnie Bush, are giving back to the community they love. For the second consecutive year they have collected bookbags and school supplies to give to community members who need help with Back-to-School shopping. This year 18 full backpacks were delivered to various families. Even more families who didn't need a backpack, or a backpack was not available, were helped with school supplies. This is their family's way of helping beat the rate of inflation.

Bonnie said the kids use their own money throughout the year to purchase lightly used bookbags and supplies they find at 2nd hand stores or discounted at retail stores. Before school she posts on Facebook that they are offering help.

"Breanna and Logan got upset that the cities offer help for supplies but there's no program for rural communities," Bonnie said, adding that rural communities are the backbone for cities. "People private message me so the recipients are kept anonymous. We offer what we can to help. If we don't have a bookbag but we do have supplies, we offer that. We do what we can to help anyone that messages me. I say we, but I just drive the kids to the store or cover cost if they're short."

Bonnie is being more help than she knows by instilling a charitable heart in her children!

They haven't asked for community help with this project and Breanna and Logan are happy to spend their own money, but those who would like to help should message Bonnie Bush on Facebook.

Logan and Breanna Bush deliver backpacks filled with school supplies to families who need help. This project is in its second year. When they ran out of backpacks they helped by offering school supplies. (Courtesy photo)

Scientists estimate that at some point, every person on Earth will step barefoot on a piece of Lego. OK, not really, but these plastic interlocking bricks, first introduced in 1949, are one of the world's most popular toys, with more than 400 billion pieces on the planet and 60 billion bricks now being produced each year. (They've even made it to space!) The Danish phrase "Leg Godt," which translates to "play well," is the origin of this brand's acronym.

Overcome First Day Jitters

By Jamie Rathbun

Family and Community Wellness

August is here, and while I have been sending children off to school for over a decade, my cousin has not. Her and I chatted, mom-tomom about sending that first kiddo off to school.

Entering a new environment filled with unfamiliar people can cause anxiety for children - and their parents! How can we overcome the separation anxiety that accompanies a child's first day of school?

Before school begins

Preparing a child for school before the first day greatly reduce anxiety a child may feel when you leave. Do this by familiarizing your child with the new environment:

Introduce your child ahead of time to common school activitiesdrawing pictures, handwriting, storytelling.

Visit your child's classroom, more than once if possible, to familiarize him with the space.

Have your child meet the teacher. If you have fears about your child entering school, don't minimize the importance of easing your anxicalm and assured you can be, the more confident your child will feel. Tips for tear-free good-byes

While we are all hoping for the best, after preparing our child and ourselves for the first day, the reality is, tear may happen. Saying good-bye on that first day can be the hardest moment for children and parents. How is best to say good-bye without it becoming a scene?

Reintroduce the teacher to your child. Allow them to form an initial relationship. Make it clear that you trust the teacher and are at ease with your child spending the day with her.

Bring a friend from home. Ask the teacher whether you child can bring along a stuffed animal to keep in his cubby/backpack in case he needs comforting. It shouldn't be a favorite one, because there is no guarantee it will come home in one piece. Other comforting items might include a family picture, a special doll, or a favorite blanket.

Make sure to say good-bye to your child. Never sneak out. As tempting as it may be, leaving without saying good-bye to your child risks his trust in you.

ety, as well as your child's. If you Once you say good-bye, leave nected with "Post Rock Extension leaving him at school, your child only serve to reinforce your child's will likely sense that. The more sense that school is a bad place.

Express your ease with leaving. Some parents wave from outside the classroom or make a funny face to say good-bye.

Don't linger. The longer you stay, the harder it is (for both you and your child). Let your child know that you'll be there to pick him up, and say, "See you later!"

Create a ritual. At day care, my younger son and I liked to do a quick kiss on the cheek followed by a fist bump. Saying good-bye the same way each day let him know that when the embrace was over, it was time for me to leave.

Learn other kids' names. When you can call your child's classmates by name ("Look, Kate and Matthew are already here, why don't you go sit my them."), it makes school seem much more familiar and safe.

Try some of these tips to ease the anxiety that your child, and you, might be feeling on the first days of school.

Vote on new personalized license plate design

The Kansas Department of Revenue (KDOR) is excited to announce that voting for the next Kansas personalized license plate design is now open. Starting today, Kansans can visit ksplates.kansas.gov to select their favorite design. Voting will end at 5 p.m. on Friday, Aug. 9, and the winning design will be announced on Monday, Aug. 12.

"We know how passionate Kansans are about license plates, and this initiative aims to give the public a direct say in selecting the next personalized plate design that will be featured on vehicles across the state for years to come," said David Harper, Director of KDOR Division of Vehicles. "We look forward to seeing which design Kansans choose."

The website offers five distinctive design options for Kansans to select from.

Voting on this round of personalized designs is different from the standard license plate designs Kansans voted on last December. To streamline the process and meet production deadlines, KDOR incorporated feedback from last year's voting to inform aspects of these designs, including a Kansas outline, wheat, and sunflowers.

The winning design will replace the current "Powering the Future" personalized license plate design.

Residents may vote for their preferred design multiple times. Shortly after the voting concludes, the winning design will enter production and be available for purchase in 2025.

The voting website was made possible with help from the Information Network of Kansas. Kansans can cast their vote by visiting ksplates.kansas.gov.

Grant opportunity available for apprenticeships

The Kansas Office of Registered Apprenticeship today announced a new $500,000 grant opportunity for established registered apprenticeship programs in Kansas. Awards will range from $75,000 to $200,000 per awardee.

These grant funds will be awarded to assist existing programs with technical instruction, on-the-job training, staffing and additional employees to implement and manage programs, marketing and outreach, and other activities.

"The Kansas Office of Registered Apprenticeship plays a vital role in our state's economic growth by helping prepare our workforce for success," Lieutenant Governor and Secretary of Commerce David Toland said. "We know that registered apprenticeships are key pipelines to career advancement, professional development and prosperity. This grant opportunity bolsters our commitment to preparing Kansans for in-demand jobs that need their skills right now."

This additional funding opportunity plays an integral part in growing and supporting the registered apprenticeship programs throughout the state. Over time, the grant has helped with recent successes including the 80% growth in new registered apprentices across the state (from 925 in 2023 to 1,672 in 2024).

"Last year, registered apprenticeship programs used these funds in a variety of creative ways," Director of Apprenticeship and Internship Shonda Anderson said. "Investments were made in Spanish-speaking instructors, new training equipment for electricians and heavy equipment operators, as well as agriculture and human resource opportunities."

The Kansas Department of Commerce currently is seeking applications. Eligible applicants must be a state educational institution, business, non-profit group or workforce board with projects that will attract and retain employees and continue to build the state's workforce through registered apprenticeship.

Those applying should clearly demonstrate linkage between project, industry demand, apprentice training and recruitment. Additionally, applicants are required to provide a 1:1 match for every grant dollar requested. Interested parties have until 5:00 p.m. August 25 to apply. Announcement of awardees is expected in September.

He is working with Delisa's to get the drop box working so that he can receive information. The KMAP renewal was approved, and the Medicare renewal says it is being processed. Dog Gone It Dog Gone it or should I say Dog Gone? It seems we have had a number of dogs loose in Lincoln recently. There are pictures of dogs on facebook wandering around and the sheriff's office is constantly receiving calls about either lost dogs or found dogs.

There are city regulations for owning a dog in the city. You can always pick up a copy at the sheriff's of-

Just to mention a few of the regulations:

All dogs over six months of age should be registered with the city clerk with your address and description of the dog. Upon registration, the owner must pres ent a current, completed certificate of immunization against rabies. The Lincoln Area Humane Society has periodic clinics for rabies vaccinations to help with the convenience of getting vaccinations.. Otherwise you must go to a veterinarian for the vaccination.

A dog running at large shall be impounded. The fine for the first offense is $25.00. The second and third offenses are $50.00. If the dog is impounded, you must pay the board bill. You must also provide proof of current vaccination when picking it up.

Also, you must consider the legal consequences if your dog should happen to bite someone either out of fear or trying to avoid capture.

Having said this, I would like to commend the Lincoln Sheriff's Department and their deputies. In spite of the many calls they get, they try to find the owner before impounding the dog. Many times, they will pick up the dog and take it to the sheriff's office hoping to find the owner before impounding it.

Given the chance, all dogs love to run free. I have a dog myself who occasionally will break loose and run but I am always right behind her. Dogs who are kept outside have more of a chance of escaping and taking off. If a dog escapes constantly, perhaps the owner should check their fence or method of restraining the dog.

During firecracker season more dogs will escape because many times the noise will hurt their ears and scare them. If there is a lot of noise and your dog is scared, please either take the dog inside or comfort the

Now, I would like to add my own suggestions for owning a dog. First and foremost, a dog is a responsibility. They are not toys to be played with when you are bored and they are not disposable when you are done with them. Dogs are the best friends and most loyal companions you could ever have and will always love you even in unfavorable conditions. I am sure you have all read stories of hero dogs who have saved people and children. I would like to add that most dogs are heroes who would give their life for their master. Like children, dogs need to be trained to obey and do their master's bidding. Also, like children, this must be done with patience and kindness. Please do not hit your dogs, there are much better ways to discipline them. If you have questions please contact a member of the Humane Society or your veterinarian.

Personally, I love dogs. My desire in writing this article is to help owners realize the responsibility of owning a dog. In another article, I hope to share the fun and joy of owning man's best friend.

Lived Experiences

Everyone we know, meet, or pass in the grocery store has their own set of personal life experiences that are unique from our own. We all come from different places, have our own set of genetics, and have different parents or families, which is part of what makes us unique from each other. We can even have different experiences than our siblings who grow up in the same home as us.

Our experiences are part of what help us learn, create adaptations to the world around us, and how we continue to grow into who we want to be. The number one goal of our body and brain is to maintain safety and security within our environment. From the moment we are born, our brain seeks for our basic needs to be met, whether it is connection, sleep, or food. As we grow, these needs becomes more complex as our abilities and understanding of the world grow

During our most informative early years, our brain and body are developing rapidly to learn how to maintain safety and connection in the world around us. The experiences that we have during these impactful times set the stage for how we begin to create adaptations, responses, and our view of ourselves.

Our lived experiences can be either positive or negative, and sometimes they can even be traumatic. Everyone creates their own set of responses to experiences and threats in their environment through these lived experiences, and the most common responses are fight, flight, freeze and fawn. The prefrontal cortex of our brain is where we maintain our ability to reason, make good decisions, and take in information around us. When our body experiences a threat to our safety within our environment, our prefrontal cortex may go "offline" and our amygdala takes over, which is the portion of our brain that controls our emotions. Our amygdala signals for our response to keep ourselves safe from the threat to take control.

If our response is fight, we might have anger outbursts, become aggressive, be impulsive, or have explosive behaviors. If our response is flight, we might become, anxious, experience panic attacks, throw ourselves into our work, and tend to be perfectionists, or become over analytical. If our response is freeze, we may have depressive tendencies, disassociate, feel indecisive, feel numb, space out or isolate from others. If we have a fawn response, we may people please, be co-dependent, have a lack of identity and boundaries with others, avoid conflict, or have an inability to say no. You can experience on or all of these responses during any given event.

These responses are natural adaptations that may be our brain's way of keeping us safe in situations or environments that feel threatening. While these responses may be a natural way for our brain to maintain safety, we can also work to re-wire our responses through coping skills and awareness of how our experiences have affected us.

It starts with an awareness that we, and others around us, have had lived experiences that have created these responses. When we are aware of this, we have the ability to process, understand, and create positive mechanisms to heal from our traumatic experiences.

The key to managing the Wheat Streak mosaic virus is controlling your volunteer wheat

By Sandra L. Wick K-State Research and Extension-Post Rock Distric Crop Production Agent

Wow.....Mother Nature just keeps summer here with the hot temperatures! Hopefully we will continue to receive some moisture. Producers are preparing for the 2025 wheat crop with variety selection and ground preparation. Stay tuned and I will share with you some management guidelines to remember about controlling volunteer wheat and the wheat streak mosaic virus.

Let's review this past wheat growing season. This year, the wheat crop was considerable better than the last couple of years!!! I did hear about some wheat that had gotten rained on with some light test weights that might have blown out the back of the combine. These kernels can germinate as the normal developed kernels. Possibly some hailed-out wheat along with the delay of wheat harvest in some areas due to rainfall could also have some seed to germinate in the wheat stubble.

The Wheat streak mosaic virus was prevalent around the state, including north central Kansas, which is vectored by the wheat curl mite. One of the best preventative measures for wheat streak is the control of volunteer wheat early and often after harvest. If volunteer wheat is allowed to stand, it creates a "green bridge", allowing wheat streak mosaic and wheat curl mites to survive. Volunteer wheat should be terminated at least two weeks prior to planting to allow sufficient time for mites to die off.

Wheat curl mites will move off growing wheat as the green tissue dries down and dies. After moving off the existing wheat at or near harvest time, the mites need to find green tissue of a suitable host soon or they will die. Producers often like to wait several weeks after harvest before making their first herbicide application to control volunteer wheat. This allows as much volunteer as possible to emerge before spraying it or tilling it the first time. Glyphosate and atrazine are two herbicides that are often used for this purpose. Often, a second application or tillage operation will be needed later in the summer to eliminate the green bridge to fall-planted wheat by making sure all volunteer is dead within ½ mile of wheat being planted in the fall. Wet weather through late summer often favors multiple flushes of volunteer wheat and also favors the growth of other grassy weeds that can also support moderate populations of the curl mites and virus.

Volunteer wheat is not the only host of the wheat curl mite. Over the years, multiple research studies have evaluated the suitability of wild grasses as hosts for both the curl mite and the wheat streak virus. There is considerable range in the ability of a grassy weed species to host the mite and the virus. Barnyardgrass is among See "POST" page 5

Bruschetta a nice slice of delicious summer living

Bruschetta is a great summer appetizer, featuring tons of fresh flavors, from ripe tomatoes to bright basil and bursts

While planning a snack menu for a recent get-together at our office, I decided the summer heat dictated some nice, cool appetizers.

After settling on some dips to go with crackers, I decided I wanted something summery and full of fresh garden vegetable flavors, so I began researching bruschetta. According to "The Inter-national Kitchen" website, the dish, featuring toasted rounds of bread, was introduced in ancient Rome, where laborers were fed day-old bread.

Also, for the record, the dish I made technically isn't bruschetta, since I opted not to toast my bread (it was just so hot that day), but I'm going to say it was a win anyway, especially because it featured lots of beautiful tomatoes, fresh basil and tons of garlic.

The recipe I used is from the website "Delish" from a post by Makinze

Gore. You can find the original post at https://www.delish.com/cooking/recipe-ideas/a27409128/best-bruschettatomato-recipe/. I added extra garlic and pepper in my version.

Bruschetta

Ingredients

- 1/4 cup extra virgin olive oil 6 to 8 cloves garlic, minced or
- thinly sliced
- 4 large tomatoes, diced
- 1/4 cup fresh basil, chopped
- 2 tablespoons balsamic vinegar
- a healthy pinch of red pepper
- salt and pepper, to taste 1 large baguette, cut in onequarter-inch slices

Directions

Heat the olive oil in a small skillet over medium-low heat. Add the garlic and saute, stirring regularly, for two or three minutes until the garlic is lightly browned and fragrant. Remove the skillet from the heat, and set it aside to cool.

Place a colander over a bowl to catch liquid, and add the diced tomatoes to the colander. Add about one-half teaspoon of salt to the tomatoes and stir to combine.

Let the tomatoes sit for at least five minutes so that they release some of their juices.

In a mixing bowl, combine the tomatoes, basil, balsamic vinegar, red pepper flakes, salt and pepper and stir gently. Stir in the garlic and oil, and then cover the bowl with a lid or plastic wrap.

Let the mixture marinate in the refrigerator for at least 30 minutes or overnight.

Serve the mixture with the sliced baguette. You can lightly oil or butter the slices and set them under the broiler in your oven for a few moments to lightly toast them, or just serve them as is.

This was fresh and delicious. Don't let the red pepper flakes scare you (although you could leave them out). They really just enhance the flavors and don't make the dish spicy. Also, the balsamic vinegar was completely on point. Don't skip it.

It was nice to have a cold, tasty appetizer to share with guests at our get-together. As a bonus, the leftovers lasted well in the fridge for a few days, giving us time to enjoy it even more. Plus, it's always nice this time of year to enjoy a delicious appetizer that the more suitable hosts for both virus and mites, but fortunately it is not that common in wheat fields. In contrast, various foxtails, although a rather poor host, could be an important disease reservoir simply because of their abundance.

If volunteer wheat and other hosts are not controlled throughout the summer and are infested with wheat curl mites, the mites will survive until fall and could infest newly planted wheat. Wheat curl mite infestations of wheat often lead to wheat streak mosaic infections. Lastly, other than timely control of volunteer, wheat variety genetic resistance is also an important tool for WSMV control. Genetic resistance to wheat streak can also reduce the risk of severe disease problems. There are currently a few varieties adapted to Kansas that have wheat streak mosaic resistance, including KS Dallas, KS Hamilton, KS Territory along with High Country and AP Roadrunner. So be a good neighbor and control your volunteer wheat! State health experts discuss need to protect growing number of older Kansans from abuse

kansasreflector.com

Kansas health care experts want to develop more partnerships and policies to protect older residents from abuse. Public health officials with the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, the Kansas Department for Aging and Disability Services and the Kansas Department for Children and Families recently discussed approaching an aging population and their abuse as public health issues. Statewide, the number of elder abuse reports filed under DCF adult protective services for fiscal year 2024, which ended June 30, was 18,523. The previous year saw a statewide figure of 18,704, and the total for 2022 was 18,674. That figure has climbed over the past decade from a statewide number of 15,722 reports in 2014.

DCF deputy director of adult protective services Chrissy Khatib said the framework exists within the public health sector to help investigate and address health hazards like elder abuse and its root causes.

"When we look at underlying issues such as social, economic, and environmental factors that contribute to elder abuse, such as social isolation, financial dependence and access to supportive services, we can really start to get ahead of this," Khatib said.

Khatib said only one in 12 cases of elder abuse are reported. "I believe that public health is actually vital in creating a society where older adults feel respected, empowered, and safe," Khatib said. "We must build safe and supportive environments for our aging population, and that includes working with collective impact." KDHE co-bureau director of family health Derik Flerlage said he wants to see the conversation regarding aging placed in the same focus as child care, with more attention paid to partnerships between local health departments and state agencies.

KDADS aging services commissioner David Anderson said the fact that the senior population is growing indicates an increasing need for associated services, such as mental health care and housing stability. He said the aging commission and the behavioral health commissions within KDADS will partner more in the coming months to discuss how best to support older Kansans.

"One of the things I've found in my relatively short time with KDADS is that we know we can't do all this work alone," Anderson said, "that it's really important for us to collaborate with state and community partners."

Lainey Faulkner, KDHE's director of the bureau of health promotion, said community health workers can be good partners for building trust between older Kansans and local health care organizations as they work to care for older residents. She said many community health workers are providing classes on topics such as diabetes prevention and reducing the risk of falls.

"They are very connected to their communities, and they have a very good idea of what their community's needs are," Faulkner said.

Megan Wolfe, senior policy development manager for Trust for America's Health, said public health initiatives such as seatbelts and a decline in smoking have led to people living longer, but there isn't an emphasis on providing support for older people within public health agencies.

Wolfe was part of a pilot program in Florida in 2018 to educate public health departments on elder abuse signs and prevention. The program is now in its third phase, which includes developing guidelines for how to approach cases of elder mistreatment that could be utilized in Kansas.

"Public health departments are uniquely situated to lead with humility," Wolfe said.

Kari Bruffett, Kansas Health Institute president and CEO, said KHI staff created the Age-Friendly Kansas advisory committee as part of its proactive approach to serving an older population. KHI officials are currently seeking online applications for the committee. Bruffett said the agency's goal is to elevate healthy aging as a core public health issue over the next two years.

of the Mississippi yet were denied common rights enjoyed by men, facing discrimination because of their gender. Women were excluded from jobs and educational opportunities and the ownership of land. Since women did not have the right to vote (also known as suffrage), they were limited in terms of their influence over laws and policies, even while having an impact on history. Before the Civil War, many women took part in reform activities, such as the abolitionist movement and temperance leagues. They wanted to pass reform legislation to address the problems they saw in American society, but politicians would not usually listen to those who were disenfranchised (did not have the right to vote). Frustration with the low status in society, women were motivated to create a movement that culminated in the Nineteenth Amendment. This amendment says, "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex." That is, it prohibits discrimination in voting based on sex.

Women first organized at the national level in July of 1848, when suffragists such as Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Lucretia Mott convened a meeting of over 300 people in Seneca Falls, New York. Early suffragists Martha C. Wright, Jane Hunt, and Mary McClintock, along with abolitionist Frederick Douglass attended this meeting. The delegates discussed the need for better education and employment opportunities for women, and the need for suffrage. While there, Stanton wrote the Declaration of Sentiments, which is considered to be the founding document of the women's rights movement.

The suffrage movement grew larger in the years following the Civil War. Women across the United States, including Kansas women, participated in the effort even though they didn't always agree on strategy. Suffrage organizations were formed to carry out a variety of tactics. Elizabeth Cady Stanton and her longtime collaborator, Susan B. Anthony, founded the National Woman Suffrage Association (NWSA). The NWSA focused on changing federal law and opposed the Fifteenth Amendment, which protected Black men's right to vote but excluded women. Several people, including Lucy Stone and Julia Ward Howe, disagreed with Stanton and Anthony's position on the Fifteenth Amendment, and formed a new organization: the American Woman Suffrage Association (AWSA). AWSA supported the Fifteenth Amendment, and its members were both Black and white.

Because neither of these organizations reflected the experiences of all women, working class women and/or women of color often experienced discrimination not only because they were women, but also due to their class and race. Leading reformers including Harriet Tubman, Frances E.W. Harper, Ida B. Wells and Mary Church Terrell created the National Association of Colored Women's Clubs (NACWC) in 1896 to campaign in favor of women's suffrage and improved educational opportunities, also fighting against Jim Crow Laws, which were a collection of state and local statutes legalizing racial discrimination. These laws remained in effect for 100 years - until 1968, marginalizing African Americans.

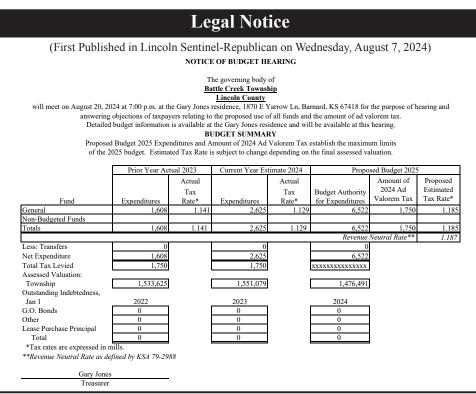

In 1890, Anthony helped merge the NWSA and AWSA to form the National American Woman Suffrage Association (NAWSA). Member Alice Paul, thought the organization was too moderate, founding the National Women's Party (NWP) in response. The NWP had a variety of strategies to bring attention to the suffrage movement. Its members picketed the White House and held demonstrations in nearby Lafayette Park and at the U.S. Capitol and Senate office buildings. They took part in lobbying, nonviolent protests, hunger strikes, civil disobedience, and silent vigils. Street speaking, pageants, and parades were some of their more eyecatching actions. Alice Paul organized the largest suffrage pageant, which took place in Washington, D.C. on March 3, 1913. About eight thousand women marched from the Capitol to the White House, carrying banners and escorting floats. Up to 500,000 spectators, in support or opposing, watched the march. Others harassed and attacked suffragists in the parade; over 100 women were hospitalized with injuries that day. The parade was important in the movement, not only due to size, but for the challenge of traditional ideas of how women should behave in public. They were loud, bold, and theatrical. Those who opposed women's suffrage feared that society would suffer if women played a role besides wife or mother. That opposition was eventually overruled.

In 1919, both the House of Representatives and the Senate passed the Nineteenth Amendment. The amendment then went to the states for ratification. Thirty-six states needed to ratify the amendment in order for it to be adopted. On August 18, 1920, the Nineteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States went into effect.

On November 2 of that year, more than eight million women voted in the national election for the first time. Women also ran for office in greater numbers. Jeanette Rankin was one of the few women to hold an office before the ratification of the amendment, and when elected to Congress in 1916 she said, "I may be the first woman member of Congress, but I won't be the last."

Women in Lincoln County and throughout Kansas worked hard to make the passage of the amendment a reality. Anna Wait, an early Lincoln teacher and co-owner of the Lincoln Beacon, was instrumental in gaining a woman's right to vote. Due to the efforts of these women, Kansas ratified the Nineteenth Amendment on June 19, 1919, becoming one of the first states to do so.
